The Rust:IO oxide extension was used to create the maps below. Its website also provides procedural card generation as a service, including a map gallery. Each procedural map is a combination of three bios: Arctic, moderate and arid (north to south). It was specifically created for PvP purposes, and devteam Rust made it quite symmetrical so they could explore the possibilities of PvP gameplay based on the team in the future. When it was originally created, the map was named Cat Island. The changes to the map of Savas Island are very different from the usual Rust gameplay. You can't build in most places, the map is quite small, and the spawning grounds have been tweaked to mostly give combat-related items. All radtowns specialize in some way like Savas Island exclusive Ammo Shack, a city dedicated to special drop ammunition, C4 shacks, and other unique buildings. A useful diagram of the island of Savas, which identifies key places such as spawning beaches and radtowns. Players spawn on the lower beaches of the map, and work their way up to the king-of-the-mountain radtown on top of the mountain to the north. This radtown provides the best, highest mining class and is designed to focus maps. For most of the map, construction is impossible. However, there is one hill in the middle of the map on which the building is allowed. On this hill, there are static spotlights to help residents with defense. On the whole map there are several camp fires, public big stoves, and other ordinances to help players survive. The loot on the map is clearly tiered, as all the boxes with loot are specially marked to show their quality. Ammunition boxes have their own model. Air drops map more often than in the usual Rust. Cannabis spawning is also much higher. Different varieties/types of looted Savas Island. You'll find skyscrapers from New York and even the Golden Gate Bridge. And I'm very happy how realistic they are, especially that bridge ! Players can explore each of these skyscrapers to loot and find different puzzles present on this map. The project lasted 6 months.
